Four Postwar Catalan Poets

Mercè Rodoreda is not only one of the most accomplished post-war Catalan authors; she is also widely considered – most notably by Gabriel García Márquez – to be the greatest Spanish writer of the 20th century. Her 1962 novel La Plaça del diamant (The Time of the Doves), which details the devastating effects of the Spanish Civil War through the stream-of-consciousness narration of a ...

The poets Joaquim Rubió i Ors in Principat, Tomàs Aguiló in Mallorca, and Teodor Llorente in Valencia were catalysts of the movement. From this frame emerged some notable poets, generally romantic and liberal, and a myriad of lesser-known poets. Jacint Verdaguer's L'Atlàntida, which won the Jocs Florals in 1877, was considered the culmination of this process because it gave to Catalan ...

Spanish literature - Spanish literature - Catalan literature: The Catalan language is a branch of peninsular rather than of southern Gallo-Romance. It shows, nonetheless, many traces of kinship with Provençal, and the literature in its origins used the Occitan language (langue d'oc, the dialects of Old French spoken south of the Loire River) and the poetic forms cultivated by troubadours ...
