Henry Chapman Mercer (1856-1930) An Eccentric Archeologist by Mark Clark. The scientist of literature is almost always portrayed as eccentric, with strange obsessions and unfathomable motives. Scientists in real life are usually much more prosaic, with ordinary lives lived in ordinary ways. It is thus with some surprise that we come to the life of Henry Chapman Mercer, a scientist and artist ...

A Bit Of History: Henry Chapman Mercer

Inspired by the Arts and Crafts movement of 1880-1920, Henry Chapman Mercer (1856-1930), created a marvel of functional art in his hometown, Doylestown, PA — the Gothic Castle, Fonthill. Located outside the magnetic pull of the big city nearby, Fonthill may not be on your radar.

SPRING FLINGS - The Washington Post

The story is about Henry Chapman Mercer (1856-1930), a rich guy who, in the 1910s, built a concrete castle for himself called Fonthill, which is today a big tourist draw in Doylestown. The author of the article talked about how cold the castle seemed to her, until she learned more about Mercer.

"A Private Man" | The Queerest Places

© Karl Graf for the Fonthill and Mercer Museum Henry Chapman Mercer's "Castle for the New World" was built entirely out of hand-mixed concrete, poured-in-place, but one could easily mistake it for a Medieval or Gothic fortress. The deceptively austere exterior gives you no indication of the eclectic menagerie that waits inside.
