Leptiminus Lamta A Roman Port

This harbour was located near the present city of Lamta on the east coast of Tunisia. The city was called Leptis Minor to distinguish it from Leptis Magna in Libya. The emperor Trajan made the city a colonia. The port was of considerable importance and had its own mint. The harbour had a mole ending in a large platform, a combination found only in Africa Proconsularis. It was needed because the sea near the coast was too shallow.

Leptiminus (Tunisia) | Roman ports

During the mid to late Roman Period, Leptiminus was an important port that played a key role in the export of agricultural products from its immediate hinterland and indeed beyond (Mattingly, Stone, and Ben Lazreg 2001). The long harbour jetty, which enabled goods to be loaded onto cargo ships, demonstrates how artificial harbour infrastructure could transform what was a relatively small town into a highly important port within port networks that criss-crossed the Roman Mediterranean. In ...
